Beaver Lake Rewards Mrs. Beniuk With Seven and Fifteen Pound Fighting Jacks

LA LA BICHE — The thrill that comes once is a life time, came to Mrs. Loveth Beniuk recently, when she was fishing with her husband on Beaver Lake.

Mrs. Beniuk felt a bite and proceed to pull in a Jack that had taken her hook. Just as she was about to pull him in close to the boat, a monstrous 15-pound Jack took the smallest one and was caught.

A considerable fight followed as the astonished sportswoman attempted to draw in her double catch. The big Jack gave quite a struggle and swam under the boat to really excite Mrs. Beniuk.

Mr. Beniuk was forced to come to his wife's assistance and take over the rod to bring in the double catch.

The fight lasted at least 15 minutes and both parties had the thrill of a lifetime.

Mrs. Beniuk has been fishing for about five years and will never forget her experience.

Among the visitors who spent at least a day in the Lac la Biche district lately pursuing the "mighty fish" were Nick Melnyk of Waskatenau, John Fedorkey and Emil Zasabeda of Edmonton and Nick Skoropad of Smoky Lake. The party spent a week-end at Owl River and all were rewarded with their quota of fish.

District Agriculturist Notes

By J. S. LORIE

Wild oat control by chemicals in cereal grain crops is a future prospect, but at the present time there is no chemical treatment that can be recommended for this purpose, says J. J. Sexsmith, agronomist, Experimental Farm, Canada Department of Agriculture, Lethbridge, Albreta.

Until such time as a relatively cheap and easily applied chemical becomes available, other means of control will have to be used. The following suggestions are offered for consideration and use:

A light fall working of grain stubble, after the shattered wild oats seed have had a chance to dry out on the surface, will give some measure of control. Fall tillage can serve no useful purpose unless two or three weeks of good drying weather precede the operation, and there is time for germination and growth before freeze-up.

Consistently good results have been obtained in delayed seeding trials conducted at Lethbridge for the past three years. Relatively wild oat-free spring wheat and early-maturing barley crops have resulted when the grains were seeded in mid-June after two or three wild oat crops had been cultivated out. Some slight reduction of infestation has resulted from earlier seedings at double the normal rate with ammonium phosphate fertilizer. The use of fertilizer with delayed seeding is suggested only in areas where profitable response is normally obtained.

Summer-fallowing is usually a disappointment for wild oat control, presumably because some of the seeds remain dormant until the following season, even though a fair amount of the existing seeds will be grown out. A year of fallowing can be of advantage if the subsequent crop is seeded late. All tillage on wild oat-infested land should be at shallow depths to retain the produced seed in the upper soil levels and prevent the turning-up of seed existing at greater depths.

Cultivated oats sown for green feed can be usefully employed, but the crop should be cut before the flowering stage of the wild oats. Several successive years of green feed production will be necessary before a noticeable decrease in the wild oat infestation can be expected.

Fall rye or winter wheat can normally be expected to produce a relatively wild oat-free crop in areas suited to their growth. The prime essential is to obtain a good stand of well-tillered crop plants before freeze-up.

Planting infested fields to grass or mixed grass and legumes for hay or pasture will provide a measure of control, although a certain amount of seed will remain viable for many years under the sod. Hay or pasture crops should be considered as a means of suppression rather than elimination.

None of these methods can be expected to eradicate a wild oat infestation in a single season, nor can they be expected to work to the same advantage in all localities or in every year. A combination of methods, chosen to suit the individual situation, should give a measure of relief from the depredations of the wild oat and make it possible to produce good yields of nearly wild oat-free crops.

Social Evening To Honor Graduates

PLAMONDON. — On June 7, graduation exercises were held for four graduands, Marcelle Belanger, Bernard Dakin, Alvine Plamondon and Diana Mischuk.

Andre Piquette was master of ceremonies.

Valedictorian was Alvine Plamondon, who delivered her speech in French. Other speakers included Diana Mischuk, "Farewell to School".

Louis Legall proposed a toast to the graduates and Diana Mischuk replied. Bernard Dakin toasted the teachers; reply was made by Arthur Girard. Marcelle Belanger proposed a toast to the parents, and a reply was made by Mrs. Dewey Plamondon.

Emile Plamondon presented the scrolls to the four graduates.

A social evening was held in the Plamondon School following the presentation of servels.

At the conclusion, a buffet supper was served. The high school girls were in charge of food arrangements.

New Area Opens For Campers And Fishermen

BAYVIEW BEACH, June 23. — Another new enterprise beink undertaken by Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Piquette will be a welcome addition to the interesting places for tourists and fi hermen.

Bayview Beach was formerly the Old Roult's Place. It is located only six miles from Plamondon corner, and although this summer its development will be only in the early stages, tourists, campers, fishermen and local residents of the district are welcome at any time.

There is ample room for parking for over 100 cars ,and it is hoped that eventually Bayview Beach will be a family recreation centre, a place to get away from it all and relax.

Children can play, picnic tables will be available, and fishermen of the family can enjoy the lake. Everyone will be welcome.

New P.G.E. Railway In B.C. Will Mean Lower Shipping Costs For Peace Farmers

VANCOUVER — For many years the PGE has been the outstanding transportation white elephant in a country cluttered with them. It was the standard joke in B.C. politics. "Province's Greatest Expense" was the most respectable of a long list of names the letters were supposed to stand for.

However, this situation is due to change soon. The Vancouver-Squamish section is going forward at once. Premier Bennett says the next step is to connect the Prince George section with Dawson Creek.

All that is of more than academic interest to Alberta, for Premier Bennett has announced that the line won't stop at Prince George. It will go on all the way to Dawson Creek in the Peace River, their joining the end of the Northern Alberta line.

What does that mean? It means that the PGE will be a short, direct connection between the vast growing Peace River region and the Pacific Coast. Edmonton will be replaced by Prince George and Vancouver. Peace River wheat and livestock will move directly to Prince Rupert or Vancouver, at a saving of several hundred miles and considerable money. Not only will Peace farmers be better off but the PGE will at last have a considerable volume of profitable business, and when the northwest develops its gas and oil industry and subsidiary industries are set up to serve it, the PGE will profit further.

So it would seem that Premier Bennett's vision and leadership will pay off.

Woman Committed For Supreme Court Trial

Mrs. Annie Melesko of Thorhild was committed for Supreme Court trial on a charge of perjury in connection with a civil action last January when she appeared for preliminary hearing in RCMP Court on Friday.

The crown alleged Mrs. Melesko did not tell the truth in regard to statements made Jan. 23 in a suit brought against her and her husband by Nick Weleschuk of Edmonton.

The original case was dismissed by Mr. Justice H. G. Johnson.

The action resulted out of an accident on Nov. 7, 1954, when an automobile driven by Mr. Weleschuk's son was in collision with a cow owned by the Meleskos. He sued the couple for $1,028 damages to his car.

During the trial, Mrs. Melesko testified she never had been warned by the police in the district to keep her cattle from wandering on the road.

At the preliminary hearing, retired RCMP Corporal James Brandon, said he had visited Mrs. Melesko on various complaints during the fall of 1954 and on each occasion warned her about her cattle coming on the road.

Harry Truman Reports From Europe

(This is he first of a series of articles by former U.S. President Harry S. Truman. It is published exclusively in this area by this newspaper).

The people are busy and smiling, the crops seem to be in excellent condition, the roads and streets are crowded with all kinds of transport, and the shop windows in the cities have plenty of good merchandise at reasonable prices.

Only in Chicago and New York did I ever see as many cars on the streets as in Paris. The tractors and machinery on the farms appeared to be brand new models and not old war surplus.

The French cars are small and seem to be just the thing for Paris because they can dodge in and out of traffic. From what I noticed, there are very few traffic rules and if there are, the drivers don't seem to follow them very closely.

We saw a wreck in the Bois de Boulogne while enroute to the cemetery at Suresne to place a wreath on the tomb of the unknown soldiers. There are twenty-four unknown soldiers in that American cemetery, and I said there, they and all the others are the price that we paid for victory in the last war.

One of those small French cars had smashed into the side of another at an intersection. The two drivers were arguing with each other as we passed by and when we returned an hour later the gendarmes were still trying to settle the dispute between them.

Mrs. Truman was very pleased by her first view of Paris. She had a very nice time and went to several shops and she said she liked what she saw. I haven't received the bills yet.

We had a quick but very comprehensive automobile tour of Paris. I couldn't help but notice how different the passing scene was from what it had been in 1918 when I had first been there.

At that time the important buildings were boarded up or sandbagged as portection against the big German gun that was dropping shells into the city seventy-five miles away. There were very few people in the streets and those who were looked drab and unhappy. This time everybody seemed to be well dressed, well fed, and very gay.

I've been asked whether the average Frenchman is upset by the recurrent crises in government today. From my observations I wouldn't say the Frenchmen on the streets seemed to care about the troubles of the government.

No, the French people of 1918 were not the gay people they appear to be today. When I returned to Paris in March, 1919, to collect the regimental baggage, every family in France mourned the loss of a close loved one — either a son, brother, or husband.

They could not be gay and they weren't. Now they seem to have regained the traditional gayety of the past. Most seem to have forgotten the bitter experience of World War Two and the sad memories of the German occupation.

The reception given me here in Europe has been as warm and friendly as that of any American crowd before which I ever appeared — in Le Havre when we docked, in Paris, at places along the route in Italy, and finally in Rome. It was very heart-warming.

The greeting in Rome, in fact, was so enthusiastic that I had to go back to my return to Washinton in 1948 to recall an equal.

Now I want to make clear that a reception like that makes a fellow feel humble and inadequate. You know that the people are paying their tribute not to the individual but to the great country which he represents.

It's their way of saying, "thank you," for what the American people have done in the way of help.

Here's the situation that you have to take into consideration: When I was president I was acting for the American people and not for me as an individual. No president can operate on an international level without the support of the majority of the people at home.

I was the occupant of the greatest office in the history of the world and I did what I did because I knew it was right and the people wanted it that way.

The people were one hundred per cent for the recovery program. Then and now, I want the people of Europe to remain friendly to us.

I never had any idea that these things were done by me as an individual and today I don't have any idea that the cheers are for me as an individual.

The European people are not interested in me but in the great country that was their friend when they needed help.

One of the amusing sidelights of this trip has been the behavior of the newspapermen who met me in Paris and Rome. The press in these two cities must have been in communication with the reporters in the United States.

They ask the same questions that the reporters do back in America. But I can understand their deep interest in what goes on in our country because what happens in the United States affects the whole world.

The Italian photographers did something which I've never seen before. On motor powered scooters, they rush ahead of you, twist and turn in traffic, and gaily snap pictures from straight ahead of your moving car. Picture taking for them seems to be a sport. Watching them in action made me wish I could ride on these scooters. But I know I can't.

The French mtorcycle police, now that I think of it, had a few funny tricks of their own. When they took us to the station in Paris one rode in front of us blowing a musical horn. Behind us came another with a whistle. When anyone got in our way, they simply reached out and pushed them aside. They looked as if they had been trained at Fort Riley to ride like that — and I told them so.

The train trip across Italy was in daylight from about Genoa on to Rome and we had a good chance to see the country. It looked as if the crops were coming along in fine shape and I observed with interest that the Italian farmers were using lots of white oxen in the fields.

I saw small mules pulling large loads of hay — loads that appeared far too big for them. Mrs. Truman noticed that there were many women working in the fields. I told her to remember that when she got home.

We were distressed by the tragic sight of so many frost ruined olive trees. Tens of thousands of them were killed by the bad winter. It's the kind of damage that is not easily repaired.

We did have one big difficulty in seeing the farm country. Our train kept going through tunnels, and I would guess that there are more tunnels in that area than on the whole Baltimore and Ohio.

At this stage of the trip I already forsee that I'm facing certain difficulties. For a while at least I know I won't be able to take my morning walks. The ligament in my ankle, which I pulled about ten days before leaving America is healing, but slowly. I still have to favor it. What gets me is that I have to deny myself the pleasure of strolling through the historic landmarks that are within walking distance of my hotel.

This is going to be a disappointment. However, we've overcome other disappointments before getting this trip under way. To go back to the beginning, after we left the White House, Mrs. Truman and I, along with our daughter Margaret, were invited by my friend Edwin W. Pauley to a month on Coconut Island just off the north coast of Oahu, in the Hawaiian islands.

When we arrived home in Independence from that trip, I found an invitation from Lord Halifax to come to Oxford for an honorary degree. Because I had to write my presidential memoirs, I asked for a postponement.

The invitation was renewed in 1954, but an obstreperous gall bladder, which I had to have removed, prevented my taking the trip then. When the invitation was extended again in 1955, I accepted for June, 1956.

Preparations were already under way when Margaret informed us that she had found a great man — and she had — and that she wanted to be married at home in Independence on April 21, 1956. The wedding took place as she had planned it and to the satisfaction of her mother, her father, Clifton Daniel's mother and father and, apparently, of the whole nation.

As soon as the wedding was over, Mrs. Truman and I resumed our preparations for the trip. When it was announced that we would go to Europe, invitations from the wonderful people who had visited us officially and unofficially while we were in the White House began to arrive from across the Atlantic.

The last few days were hectic.

Health Unit Notes

By PEGGY GRAHAM, R.N.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR TEEN-AGER

Healthy Attitudes Toward Health

Sixteen year old Joe was just leaving the house when he heard this familiar refrain: "Be sure you wear your rubbers today, Joe. It looks like rain."

It's only natural for parents to be concerned about the health of their teen-agers. They've been concerned with it since their youngsters were born. But often in a teen-agers mind parental emphasis on health habits is connected with "babying."

Teen-agers want to be attractive and alive and when they know that good health and good looks often go together, they usually appreciate the worth-whileness of working for the positive rewards good health habits bring — bright eyes, glossy hear, proper weight for height, and the abundant energy and confidant bearing that express vitality of zest for living.

The same basic priuciples of diet, rest, exercise and cleanliness that apply to younger and older people apply to adolescents as well. But teun-agers are often faced with special problems of their own. They often worry over being too fat or too thin, too short or too tall. Growing too fast or too slowly as compared with their friends makes them miserable.

You can lessen their anxieties by letting them know that not all youngsters follow the same pattern of growth. They need to understand that they're not abnormal just because their time-table of growth is a diferent one. They often need to be reassured that bigness or littleness at a particular age have practically nothing to do with "dumbness" or "smartness".

Many of them worry about their complexions. If their faces are broken out with the blackheads and pimples or acne, their misery is doubled.

You can do a great deal to help your teen-ager make the most of his looks during this time. Your family doctor will be a real help here. The physician can often help the youngster clear up his blotched complexion and he can prescribe a suitable diet.

Regular medical examination and consultations are important at all times. They can be especially valuable at adolescence. They give the doctor a chance to see that the youngster is growing normally. He can often help most by just being reassuring. When there is nothing seriously wrong with a youngster, just being told by his doctor that he is normal is often the only medicine a teen-ager needs.

Saftey, too, is a serious concern to parents of teen-agers, and rightly so since about one-third of all fatal accidents occur at home, every effort must be made to eliminate hazards in and around the house. This can be a co-operative understanding, and youngsters can be helped to apply at home the safety knowledge they have learned in school. Many teen-agers have tremendous enthusiasm for projects of this kind, and can usually be counted on to round up the entire family to participate.

Most mothers and fathers are fearful when their boys and girls first begin to drive a car, and with very good reason. For statistics show that it is in the 15-to-19 age group that accident fatalities mount rapidly.

It is not good sense, even if it were possible, to refuse to let your child drive when he is legally and actually old enough to. But it is good sense for you to see to it that he is a capable driver and that he understands and obeys the traffic rules and regulations. And that means that you must observe them, too.

Teen-agers do need your cooperation in developing a sense of responsibility for maintaining good health and safety habits, but they resent being "picked on" about them.

In many schools they learn about the importance of regular medical examinations; they should learn about calling a doctor early in illness; about the work of public health officials and voluntary health agencies; about ways in which everyone in the community can encourage the work of these groups and get their full benefits; about good nutrition; about many other health and safety rules and measures and the reasons for them.

How your youngsters will use this information in real life depends in good part on your own practices and attitudes.

Johnny Menard, who is employed at Drayton Valley, has come home for a visit.

10 Music Pupils Participate In Annual Recital

LAC LA BICHE — The annual recital by Mrs. Kelly's music pupils was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. Badry on Sunday evening, June 10, with 32 parents and friends present.

The class this year numbered 16. The range of offerings was all the way from primary to grade seven, from appealing little numbers like "Ten Little Indians" to the dignified "Nocturne" by Chopin.

Each pupil played three selections, classical, semi-classical, and popular. Names of participants, with one of the contributions of each, are as follows: Annette Maccagno, "Ten Little Indians"; Victoria Hamilton, "Little Birch Canoe"; Jo-Anne Hamar, "The Old Oaken Bucket"; Joe Cunningham and Donald Stubberfield, a duet, "Waves of the Danube"; Elaine Lobay, "Allegro Vivace"; Marilyn McMillan and Carol Stewart, a duet, "Fairest and Bravest"; Rita Maccagno, "The Robin's Return"; Donna Hamar, "Old Folks at Home" in variations; Lynn Breau, "Souvenir"; Lola Badryt, "Boogie Woogie Flip"; Louise Badry, "The Witche's Flight"; Lillian Zinko, "Barcarolle" from the "Tales of Hoffman"; Grace Grandish, "Nocturne" by Chopin; Maureen Kelly, "Rock and Roll Waltz."

On behalf of all the pupils, Annette Maccagno and Vicki Hamilton presented Mrs. Kelly with an electric frying pan, as a token of their appreciation.

A delicious lunch was served to conclude a most enjoyable evening.

Class Poem

By PETER RUDYK

This is a poem (believe it or not) composed by that literary genius, Peter Rudyk, especially for the occasion, and recited by him at the graduation banquet at Dr. Swift School, Lac la Biche. It is published here in the hope that it will serve as an inspiration (or warning) to other aspiring young poets.

When just a young boy in Mexico
My ambition was to be a big bandito,
But Mama would scold me
And she always told me,
"If you wish to be a fool, and just have fun
Then go to school
And be an educated one.

I thought it would be nice
To take her advice;
So I went to a school
That satisfied my wish
In a pleasant little town called Lac la Biche.

The teachers I found
Were beyond compare;
They were resourceful, brilliant,
honest, and fair.
The principal was a truly great man
Whose name I'll remember
As Mr. MacMillan.

Through the years as a rule,
I thought I served a purpose in school
On which no one would frown;
I idly walked into class each day
And kept the average down.

But our gentle French teacher
Whom everyone knows
Soon got tired of my constant zeros.
And wished I would go
Where no Christian goes.

English was all right
Most of the time;
Still Mrs. Cunningham dared not look
At this poem of mine.

So I hope you won't laugh
From now to next year,
For if you wanted something better
I could have quoted a hundred lines of Shakespeare.

But if poetry reveals character in each line,
It just goes to show you
I've been a poor clown most of the time.
I admit that it should be much more sincere,
Especially at this time of year.

For the graduands here who are gathered around
Will all become famous and world renowned.
So before you decide to leave and go home
I will thank you all for listening to this poem.

rry Truman Reports From Europe

assembling my individual luge I was coming down the stairs sed a step and that raised oc with my liament.

/e had a series of luncheons, ners, and receptions on the way New York, and I was twice en birthday parties, with birthcakes and all the trimmings.

he old Atlantic, for a change, as smooth as the Pacific, and sun shone as brightly as in nolulu. It was quite a different ssing from the one I made in 8. Then we had left New York the George Washington — one the confiscated German ships— midnight the day before Easter nday. There were very few hts, just a few showing here l there, but we were able to see statue of Liberty as we went

I was billeted on the deck h four other first lieutenants, l we decided if we managed to ne back from the war, Miss perty would have to turn a- und if she wanted to see us ain.

This was the first time I had n her since then.

n the summer of 1945 I went to tsdam. This time I left Norfolk, ginia, in the USS Augusta, ich took me as far as Antwerp.

Antwerp I was flown in the DC4 known as the sacred cow Berlin and the Potsdam confere. I had no idea with what I uld be faced when I met with nston Churchill, the prime miner of Great Britain, and Generalimo Josef Stalin, premier of Soviet Union. But I had an enda for consideration at that eting, which neither of the oer gentlemen had.

It was quite an experience. hen the conference finished and e protocol document was signed, returned to Plymouth, England, ere I was entertained at luncheon on the British cruiser Renown King George VI. We had a most easant conference, and King orge returned my visit by coming to the Augusta for a further nference. I was very much impressed by his knowledge of afirs and his very pleasant pernality.

This trip, I know, will be a much ore pleasant one than either of e others, even with the bothersome ligament.

I know that I am not going to able to see the ordinary folk I ould like to see in the countries e visit, the language difficulty is t the only reason. It is simply at they would not talk to me as ey would to the ordinary tourt.

But, I am looking forward to eing and talking with many of r friends, official and unofficial, ho have extended invitations to in all countries.

I am particularly anticipating a ry pleasant visit with his Holiess the Pope. I have had a great al of correspondence with him ring the war years and in the mediate postwar period of reonstruction.

I know that his overall interest world peace. The correspondence between us was extremely teresting because the Pope is ry interesting.

As might have been expected, veral people have asked me estions dealing with American reign policy. I have not answerl such questions, not because I on't have opinions on various pics, but because I do not think e place to express them is outde the United States.

The world knows that the president of the United States is responsible for our foreign policy nd no American should attempt to mbarrass him in this field while broad.

No one should attempt to pull the rug from under him. It happened to me when I was president, and I know how it feels.

That is why I am steering away from generalizations and sticking to reporting my own personal impressions and observations. I may have a few things to say about what I've seen when I arrive back in the United States, but that is the place to say them, not over here.

The United States is the last hope of the free world. What I have seen up to now on the present trip has in no way diminished my belief that the whole free world can and will work together for the cause of peace.

Some day the United Nations will work in the way it was intended to work, and then you will see the greatest increase in the standard of living for hundreds of millions of people that mankind ever witnessed.

If the machinery could be devised to raise the standard of living in the world by only three per cent, It would keep the plants and factories in the United States and in all other industrial countries working continuously at an unparalleled rate to meet the demand for their products.

That is what we have to keep aiming for and what I've seen in France and Italy makes me think that with God's help the job can be done.

"Haven Of Rest" Opened By Minister P W

The Hon. R. D. Jorgenson, Minister of Public Welfare, will "turn the sod" at the start of a new Christian dormitory for the Haven of Rest Old Folks' Home.

The ceremony will be held on Sunday, June 17, at 3 p.m., followed by an open air service, with special music and refreshments. Rev. Curry will be one of the guest speakers.

The Haven of Rest is an independent enterprise, carried on by a group of Christian laymen, in cooperation with a number of Edmonton and local churches.

There are now a good number of old folks enjoying this home, which has three cottages and a two-storey building. The new dormitory is now very urgently needed to facilitate existing conditions, and will be a tremendous help in providing much needed space to give more old people a home.

The Haven of Rest is beautifully located on the Fort trail, about two miles beyond the Oliver Institute.

The home is operated under the direction of Rev. N. McRae, R.R. 6, North Edmonton.

As there is space provided for another 15 cottages, any church or Christians wishing to provide a cottage may do so by contacting Rev. McRae.

Otto Kamke To Build Cabins

OWL RIVER — The shortage of motels, cabins and resorts in the Lac la Biche area has given Otto Kamke the opportunity to plan four cabins on his four-acre plot several miles south of Owl River.

Otto has a general store there and has often counted 200 cars along the river, many having travelled from the U.S., Calgary and Vancouver.

Square Lake is in the vicinity and has given up 40-pound jackfish.

When a local business group in Chicago promised their customers a big sale, they weren't exaggerating a bit.

Cardston Is Alberta Headquarters For Mormons

CARDSTON (BUP)—Since the time that thousands of Loyalists who did not agree with the American colonies' break with Britain, trekked north into the Maritimes, Canada has been the haven of groups from other lands who sought freedom from persecution in their own homelands.

Among these groups that entered the country during the last two centuries was a small party of 40 Mormons from Salt Lake City, Utah. They moved across into Canada in June, 1887.

The group was under the strong leadership of Charles Ora Card, son-in-law of Brigham Young who had led the Latter Day Saints across the plains some 40 years earlier to found the State of Utah. Card had come into conflict with U.S. federal authorities by practising polygamy. When federal officers went to Salt Lake City to arrest him, he fled to seek refuge on Canadian soil.

The 10 rain-soaked families arrived at Lee's Creek in southern Alberta, 14 miles from the international border. The Mormons came the 750 miles from Utah in nine wagons and brought with them 40 head of cattle and their household goods.

The morning after they pitched their camp there was eight inches of snow. Undaunted by this, the industrious settlers under Card's guidance commenced to build cabins, till the soil and plant crops. By fall they were able to gather their first small harvest of oats, potatoes and vegetables that was large enough to enable them to survive the first long winter.

The Mormons were responsible for much of southern Alberta's development. They founded the town of Cardston, named after their leader, and today, it is the centre of a rich farm district. In the town, they started a cheese factory, grist mill and saw mill.

John Taylor, then president of the L.D.S. church, encouraged the more restless members of the religious sect to leave Salt Lake City to join their brethren in Canada. Among those who came north were many miners who opened up the Alberta coal fields.

Card was reported to have been responsible for the construction of the first irrigation canals and ditches that have turned the arid southwest corner of the province into some of the most productive land on the western prairies.

In 1923 the Mormons completed building the $1,000,000 Alberta temple after 25 years in Cardston. The late "stake president" Edward Wood was appointed the first temple president. It still is the only Mormon temple in the British Commonwealth.

There are some 35,000 Mormons in Canada today. In religion and culture, the church still maintains a strong tie with their brethren in Utah. Several influential citizens are members of the L.D.S. church, including Solon Low, national leader of the Social Credit party, and Alberta treasurer, E. Hinman.

Victor Riesel, crusading labor columnist, blinded by an acid attack: "There has got to be a federal investigation of labor racketeering which infests unions."

Over 1600 Resident Ratepayers

of the MUNICIPAL DISTRICT OF ATHABASCA

Have Specifically Requested that the Municipal District mail them a Sun Publishing Co. Ltd. newspaper each week under the Municipal Paper Plan.

Another paper has reluctantly agreed to serve the people of the Municipal District, after steadfastly refusing since 1950.

Although the district is in serious financial condition, council has refused to accept the lowest tender on the Municipal Paper Plan or give ratepayers their choice of a paper.

Ultimately, I believe the Council of the Municipal District of Athabasca will make the right and fair decision regarding the Municipal Paper Plan. Therefore, it is our intention to continue uninterrupted service to the resident ratepayers of the Municipal District.

The Rally program was both spirited and entertaining. Each club gave a report on year's activities; a demonstration on some phase of their project work and an entertainment number.

Their entertainment ran in the gammet of recitations, musical selections, a fashion show and a unique hat review. At noon they broke off for a picnic style lunch and riotous ball game at the Fair grounds. The afternoon pro ram began with a sing-song. Following this the girls heard a brief address by Mr. Ed Ness, Field Representative of the Alberta Wheat Pool. Mr. Nes showed the film of the R.C.M.P. Musical Ride, which everyone enjoyed. The program ended with the judges'— Miss Mewha, Ass't Supervisor, 4-H Clubs, and Miss D. Montalbetti, District Home Economist — remarks.

There were a few pretty tired girls by the time it was all over, but everyone had a good time and gained something for their club work next year.

Thanks for the sucsessful day go to:

Hazel Bluff Foods, who acted as Hostes es.

Alberta Wheat Pool, especially Mr. Ed. Ness.

Miss Mewha, who came out from Edmonton to assist in judging, and a special thanks to all parents and leaders who made it possible for the girls to come at this busy time of year.

And to all those we have forgotten and who contributed in some way to make our rally a big success.
